NORTHWESTERN INTERDISCIPLINARY LAW REVIEW

Dear legal scholar,

I am writing to you as an editor of the Northwestern Interdisciplinary Law Review, an academic journal of interdisciplinary legal scholarship. I would like to notify you that we are currently accepting submissions for our upcoming Spring 2012 volume.

In its fifth year of publication, the NILR features academic papers that weave together legal, political, and policy-oriented analyses. Working alongside talented law students, practitioners, and professors, consecutive classes of Northwestern University students have carved out a space for substantial legal dialogue between scholars of various disciplines and perspectives. In the past, our journal has featured contributions from a wide variety of political thinkers, including Alan Dershowitz, Theodore Sorensen, Louis Wolcher, and Lawrence Friedman.

Ideal articles exemplify sound scholarship, present original arguments, and make a substantial contribution to the existing interdisciplinary study of law. All submissions may be emailed to nilr@u.northwestern.edu. We accept articles on a rolling basis; however, most of our selections are made by March 2. To read past issues and learn about the NILR, you can visit our website at www.nilr.org.

If you have any questions about the criteria for submissions or the journal itself, please do not hesitate to e-mail me.

All the best,

Karly Vercauteren
